

Biography Of Logan Williams

Based in New York, Logan Williams is pioneering in project finance and utility-scale renewables development. Focusing on mergers and acquisitions and capital markets within the energy and infrastructure sectors.

Professional Background

Logan Williams Energy Finance holds a notable record of supporting significant energy transactions at her firm. She has been a critical player in marketing and selling power plant portfolios and raising debt and tax equity for utility-scale renewable power plants. Her comprehensive financial acumen extends to assessing earnings sustainability, cash flows, and operational working capital requirements of companies. Her rigorous industry and market research further enhances her proficiency in identifying potential acquisition targets, buyers, and investors.

Before her current role, Logan showcased her skills at EDP Renewables, the fourth-largest wind developer globally. Here, she maintained relationships with institutional investors and managed tax equity finance models for the firm's portfolio of wind and solar assets across North America. In addition, she liaised with commercial banks and hedge funds and kept track of internal rates of return, updating tracking models annually for tax equity investors.

Education and Early Career

Having graduated with a BA in Political Science from Columbia University, Logan embarked on her professional journey with a year-long veterans apprenticeship at Goldman Sachs. She served five years of active duty with the United States Coast Guard, demonstrating her commitment and versatility.

Areas of Expertise

Logan possesses deep expertise in various aspects of the energy and finance sector, including, but not limited to, tax equity, debt capital markets (DCM), sell-side M&A, and renewable power finance and development.

Hobbies and Personal Life

Outside her professional realm, Logan is an adventure enthusiast who cherishes kitesurfing, scuba diving, and skiing. Her connection with the water runs deep as she grew up in a small beach town on the coast of the Carolinas. She learned to kitesurf at a women's retreat and picked up skiing after a friendly invitation to Aspen. As for scuba diving, it's a fun activity she picked up zealously watching her dad.

The graphic consists of a dark brown background with several geometric elements: a white square with a thin border, a white line, and two clusters of dots (one white, one orange). On the right side, there is a portrait of Logan Williams, a young woman with long blonde hair, wearing a black blazer over a white top, smiling against a dark grey background.
